Finally, to make it all work, place the ZIP archive in the same folder as NirCmd: C:\TOOLS\NirCmd\WinsxsLite1.88.zip Q: Defining temporary tables in a batch to avoid SQL injection attack I have a bunch of batch files running MySQL queries. I want to protect against SQL injection attacks, so I want to define the TEMPORARY table/define the temp tables in the batch file. I found the following article in forums, but it does not seem to apply to my situation. I do not want to store the temp. table definition in the DB itself, because I might make changes to the table and want to replay the whole batch file. I basically want to say CREATE TABLE mytempTable AS SELECT * FROM someTable. Is this possible to do? A: I would use dynamic SQL for this. If you can afford the performance hit, this will be much safer than using a temporary table: Starting with system version Ubuntu 12.04 LTS (Precise Pangolin) Installing is as simple as: $ sudo apt-get install quorumsodax This will begin installing all of the necessary tools to monitor the system. The installer also copies the Quorum software into your home directory, or the directory of your choice for your personal installation. You may need to add a repository to make some of the packages available to you. To add the Ubuntu repository so you can install quorumsodax, do the following: Add the Main Archive repository: $ sudo add-apt-repository ppa:gwendal-lebihan-dev/quorumsodax Update the repository list: $ sudo apt-get update Install quorumsodax: $ sudo apt-get install quorumsodax That's it! You're now installed and ready to go.By Richard Todd The threat posed to Great Britain from
